

The Gettysburg Address

Four _____ and _____ years ago our fathers brought forth, on this _____, a new nation, _____ in Liberty, and dedicated to the _____ that all men are created equal.

Now we are _____ in a great _____ war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so _____, can long _____. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to _____ a _____ of that field, as a final resting place for those who here gave their _____ that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and _____ that we should do this. But, in a _____ sense, we cannot dedicate - we cannot _____ - we cannot _____ - this ground. The _____ men, living and dead, who _____ here, have consecrated it, far above our poor _____ to add or _____. The world will little note, nor long _____ what we say here, but it can never _____ what they did here. It is for us the _____, rather, to be dedicated here to the _____ which they who _____ here have thus far so _____. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great _____ remaining before us - that from these _____ dead we take increased _____ to that _____ for which they here gave the last full _____ of devotion - that we here highly _____ that these dead shall not have died in _____ - that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of _____ - and that _____ of the _____, by the people, for the people, shall not _____ from the _____.
